THE CHRONICLE AND DIRECTORY FOR CHINA, JAPAN, &c.

For 1880.

With which is incorporated "THE CHINA DIRECTORY."

This Work, the ONLY one of the kind in China or Japan, is now in the

EIGHTEENTH YEAR

in its existence, and is NOW READY FOR SALE. It has been compiled from the MOST AUTHENTIC SOURCES, and no pains have been spared to render it THOROUGHLY RELIABLE, both as a Directory and as a Work of Reference on Commercial Matters.

Various additions have been made, tending to render the Work still more valuable for reference. The descriptions of each Port have been carefully revised, and the trade statistics brought down to the latest date obtainable.

It contains a DESCRIPTION of and DIRECTORY for HONGKONG, MACAO, PAK MOI, KOWLOON, WHANGPO, CANTON, SHANGHAI, AMOY, TAIPEI, TIENTSIN, Peking, KANGHAI, CHONGKING, KIOCHING, WUHAN, HANKOW, CHANGCHOW, TIENTSIN, Peking, NEW CHANG, PEKING, NAGASAKI, KOBE (HONGKONG), OSAKA, YOKOHAMA, NIKITA, HAKODATE, MANILA, CEBU, SAIGON, CAMBODIA, HAIPHONG, HANOI, BANGKOK, and SINGAPORE, as well as condensed accounts of China, Japan, the Philippines, and the Ports of America.

The Work is embellished with the following Plans and Maps:—Chrono-lithograph Plans of VICTORIA, HONGKONG, of CANTON, the FOREIGN SETTLEMENTS at SHANGHAI, a Chrono-lithograph Plan of the COAST of SIGNALS in use at VICTORIA, PAK MOI, and MAPS of the COAST of CHINA and HONGKONG.

The "Chronicle and Directory for China, Japan, and the Philippines" is published in Two Forms—Complete at $5; or with the Lists of Residents, Port Descriptions and Directories, Plan of Victoria, and Code of Signals, at $3.

Orders for Copies may be sent to the Daily Press Office, where it is published, or to the following Agents:—

A SUMMER DAY.

The flowers lie sleeping beneath the dew—
But the Mother had watched the whole night through.
The wild sweet carol of one small bird
Was the sound the weary watcher heard.
And the Summer dawn grew into the morn,
But still she sat weeping beside her first-born.

Life was fading from cheek and brow,
And the Mother's heart was hopeless now;
Not one sound in this chamber of death
Was heard—save the Maiden's laboring breath.
No word of murmur the Mother spoke;
Effort and calm are the hearts that break.
Morning passed—and the Noon so still
Bathed in warm loveliness word and lip.
Shunburen ails from the West went by,
And the Mother watched for her child to die.
Afternoon came—and the Maiden lay
Lifeless and goalless—a mould of clay?
Rains came down as from eyes that wept,
Watching was over—the Maiden slept.
Through the quiet falling of evening rain,
The bird's soft carole stole its again!

Then the Mother said—"Tis a message for me,
To tell me, O child, that 'thi world with thee!'
And the Summer day ended, for 'late or long,
Every day wencheth to even song."
—Chambers's Journal.

He can scarce tell how the days passed; and when he awoke in the perpetual gloom, and knew not where he was, he was so glad to find himself still alive, that he was content to spend the end of that week; and then came the funeral Saturday night, when the drums beat round the city all through the hours of darkness; and just at dawn, as I was sitting by my father's side, chilled and sad, he opened his eyes. "Little Mistress Chamberlayne," he said softly, "how go you affairs of mine?" "I am well, father," I answered, giving in faith; and oh! I wish—"Not that they should abridge their faith," said I. "Nay, little daughter say not so. But it is in God's mercy I am laid low; for I wish it was too bitter for me to see the strifeful day. And, Alicia, I caught a glimpse of thy husband and my son Dick before the brenechoe. What if my angel and heart's love were dead? Of that I am not sure; but which cost me both to my life and want God's will. He knows I have done my poor best, and he will have pity upon this day and people." I caught at his words "thy husband," and said eagerly "How did he look?" "As ever," was the reply, "as noble and brave as those men of whom I have heard; but he is dead." August 25th, may he haunt the most fearful Twenty red hot cannon balls were fired from Lanthorn, and yet did but little harm. Beacon fires were lighted on the cathedral tower, so that if relief were near, I might be sure that the city held out. Thomas-Pury in charge of the beacons, and narrowly escaped his life by being hit by a cannon ball. A shower of tumult and war, with fires glaring and cannon sounding, as I was standing in the porch, Lance suddenly appeared. He looked wild and excited and said—"Alicia this war was shot at my feet; it boars heavy tidings. How is my father and where is Joan?" He put his arm round me as he spoke, "Little unwoman, how dost thou?" "Little sister, I am weary of the fighting; I am weary of the strife. I fear my heart will faint at this news." As he spoke he drew me nearer, and by the light yet left I read on a fragment of linen, which had been twisted tight that the arrow might bring it—"Sir Brook Chamberlayne lies safely dead." "Give me the word," said I, "Gandy, 'Green Robin Wood's Hill'." And now I did not cry out or swoon. I drew myself apart from Lance, and said—"Go in and see our father and mother, and pray much for me." "Thy loving Brook Chamberlayne?" Lance asked me. But I could not speak. I learned of him against the wall, pressing my face to his, and crying out, and praying God to help me to go to my husband. Then with a sudden rush of memory came before me, that spring day, when, weeping, I had stood as now; and instead of the beacon-fire there was the avenue sunshine; and instead of the boom of cannon and sharp report of musket, there was the cawing of the rooks, and the murmuring words of the priest. And then the leaden shell struck, and I seemed to be the words—"I am the same yesterday-to-day, and for ever." Lance did not tarry long. He was passing out hastily, Joan heaving on his arm, when I caught his hand saying—"Let me come through the East Gate, Lance; I must do so; it is my husband's word and mine." "I will not oppose it. It cannot be, Alicia. Thy husband is dead, and it is possible, and I must do it. O Joan!" I said, appealing to her, "you were witness to our marriage; help me to go to him." "I will do what in me lies," she said. Then, turning to Lance, she said: "If I come to-night when you are on guard at the East Gate let us pass through." "No, no," he said, "I cannot do that. I am not the same man a traitor; they will say I am league with the enemy." "But they shall never know," Joan said. "I will disguise her so that none shall know her. I will bring her to the gate, and thou wilt not turn back, Lance!" adding, in a low voice, "for my sake." She made a gesture, and he was gone. She was alone, watching Joan to his heart, he said—"Do not promise to do what may cost the child her life. And then he was gone.—Memories of Troublesome Times, by EMMA MARSHALL.

SIR WILLIAM EARCOURT.

Twelve gentlemen; whose spirits were high, once agreed to dine together at Greenway on a fixed day, and, on the principle of ipse dixit, the party was fixed. But the number of the party should be doubled each bringing a friend. The "friend" question was to be the man whom each the original twelve severally and respectively disliked most heartily. When the guests arrived at the Trafalgar, there proved to be thirteen in all, everybody having invited Mr. Wyndon-Earcourt.

But the party, which is probably the size most others. For some unexplained reason, Sir William Earcourt has never been a popular personage. Probably two reasons militate against his social success. He Carpenter bees), or "wood picadors," as some persons term them, hollow out galleries in decayed wood, and build a number of cells placed one over the other. These bees are not found, so entomologists tell us, in this country; they belong to a warmer clime, and the perfect insects appear in the spring with the first of the apple blossoms. They have six legs, four perfectly formed wings, and two long scimitar-like mandibles. In England, where they work in wood as mason bees do in earth, and who have been named carpenter bees by one of the first French naturalists. I saw one at work this year in the woodwork outside my bedroom window. The females of solitary bees pass the winter in a state of slumber, and lay their eggs in the spring. Having filled up all the cells in their nests, and closed each with a sort of honeyed paste, they die; they never live to see their children hatched out. The way in which the violet-coloured carpenter bee works is exceedingly interesting. The egg is first laid in the middle of the cell, and it is laid a paste of pollen and honey. Ten or twelve cells are thus filled, and then the chief entrance is closed with a sundry covering. These proceedings occupy several weeks, the eggs being deposited at intervals, for the first laid has become a perfect insect by the time the last leaves the grub state. The head is always turned downwards, so that the insect may come out through the bottom of its cell; and as one cell is built upon the other, the first of the series is at the very top of the nest. Each (in this turn) have one of the floor of its hiving place, when it finds the way out before long. Mason bees build their nests against walls with tempered earth. They look very like little lumps of earth plas-

red against the wall. A wasp goes to them to leave its prison, and removes the mud from the corners, so that it can enter. It crawls in with its mandibles. Many species of mason bees are very small, about the size of a house fly. There is a bee called, the poppy bee (Osmia papaveris), because she carries her nest with the petals of the scarlet poppy. She excavates a perpendicular hole to the earth, about three inches deep, filling it to the extent of an inch with honey, or pollen. She then deposits one egg, and folds over the secret tawny cover it, filling it with mud. Many cells are thus made, and each cell is an excavation. Mrs. Poppy's color is black, with reddish grey hairs on the head and back, and a grey silk-like abdomen. Her ruseful cutter bee makes a hole in the hard ground of a well-beaten down pathway, from six to ten inches deep, and makes several thumb-like cells, with circular covers of leaves, folded very neatly together. These leaves are perforated, but birch and mountain ash, or any leaf with a serrated margin, will do. No cement is used, the elastic properties of the leaves keep them together. It must require great regularity and much time to construct a cell, for each one takes from nine to twelve pieces of folded leaf. When all is quite ready, honey, pollen, and a single egg are placed, and the cell is closed with three pieces of leaf exactly circular. The corner extremity of one cell fits into the open end of the next, thus rendering the fabric more secure. Then there are the cuckoo bees, with a reddish orange color, called Spilodictyon, called impostors, because they steal the cells of mason in a heap of stones, and collect honey and sting.—One a Week.

Some thirty years ago, among the hills in the neighbourhood of Ephesus and Smyrna, was a robber chieftain named Kutridji Danni, whose name was well known to all the people of the country. He allowed no one to be persecuted by his hand so long as he was at the head of it. He had a strange habit of relieving some persons of their wealth and bestowing it on others according to his own sweet will that was very much akin to the practices of Robin Hood; and he was renowned for open-handedness giving to the really poor, and also for punishing any one who was guilty of being unkind to the poor. The lives of the neighbouring villages. According to popular tradition in the Levant, Kutridji Danni's wild life dated from the time when, as a young man, he entered the service of a gentleman at Smyrna, and was, for some slight offence, seized and thrown into prison. It was not long before he found means to escape, and made his way, under various names, to the hills near the ruins of Ephesus. Here he gathered round him a band of adventurers, who were, however, completely under his control, and with him at their head they became the terror of the surrounding country. Dreadful trouble they gave to the authorities, who, even had they been very desirous of taking them, could never have picked upon their whereabouts for action. The authorities of the neighbouring villages, who always contrived to let the brigands know the movements of the troops, and the measures on foot for their discomfiture. Nothing could be done to stop the depredations of this bold outlaw, who was as daring as he was brave, and as grateful as he was courageous. One evening the family of a Smyrna merchant, who had just returned from a journey, were all assembled at supper, with doors and lattices wide open, as they invariably are in the East. Suddenly twelve men, armed to the teeth, entered the apartment, with the chieftain at their head; and seating themselves on the divans, told the reluctant hosts that they would not disturb them on no account, but that when they had quite finished their supper they too would take some supper. Somewhat reassured, though wondering what might next befall, the terrified family made a show of finishing their repast, and then gave place to the uninvited guests, waiting on and supplying them with everything they could desire. They all supped heartily, behaving, meanwhile, as well as could be expected, and when their hosts rose to leave, the twelve men, their entertainers courteously, and told them that they were all thenceforth free to hunt or travel where they pleased, and would never be molested, as "Kutridji Danni never forgot a kindness." — "Little Folks."

DETROIT. It is now over 100 years since an American philosopher propounded the query, "Why is a woman afraid of a cow?" and yet no one has ever succeeded in giving a satisfactory answer. There is once in a while a woman who doesn't seem to have the slightest fear, even when passing a cow with one horn all twisted out of shape; but follow that woman home and you will find that she kicks the dog, cuffs the children, jaws her husband, and knows how to sharpen a butcher-knife and use an axe. The real woman has a mortal terror of cows, and the real cow seems to have an antipathy for her.

Friday forenoon a lady was walking down Cass Avenue when she suddenly came upon a cow. The animal was feeding on other side of the street and the boy went out to watch her eat under a shade tree and played on a mouth-harp.

The lady halted.

The cow looked up.

"Lost anything, ma'am?" asked the boy as he moved the music from his mouth.

"I—I'm afraid of that cow!" she replied.

"What fur? Cows don't bite nor kick, same as a horse. All they kin do is to run 'round their horns through you and pin you to the ground."

"Oh! my—she's coming?"

"No she hasn't. She's just making believe that she wants to get at ye and took ye over the fence."

"Oh! but I dare not pass!"

"Yes, you dare. Cows know when a woman is afraid just as quick as anybody. The main'ty you give cows to understand that you can't do any harm by the head and mop the ground with 'em they go hunting fur 'elover."

"Dear me, but I guess I'll go back!"

"I wouldn't. If ye'll any spit on yer hands and shake yer fist at her she'll waltz right down. Cows know who's boss just as well as men do. Now, then, I'll hold yer parasol while you spit on yer hands."

"I won't. I'm going right home!"

"Well, my little brother he swears at 'em instead of spitting on his hands. See if you can do that."

"No—no—no! I'm going now!"

"If I was a woman and I couldn't swear or spit on my hands, I should carry a sword-cane to stab cows with," observed the boy as he looked across the way.

"You can't do that," but there's another cow up there!" exclaimed the lady, as she looked up the street.

"Yes, lots of cows around these days, but I never heard of two cows attacking a woman at once. I guess one generally bows 'em all to pieces first, and then paws at the mangled remains. If you—"

The lady uttered a first-class scream and made a dash for the nearest gate. It opened and she after a couple of minutes went over the fence and up the front steps of a strange house, there to remain until her husband could be summoned by telephone to come and set as body-guard.

"I'd just like to be a woman," mused the boy as he sat down to punish his mouth with organ some. "I'd carry a bowie-knife down town and stab a cow in the back of the head to hook me would feel that yer knif playing 'mumble-peg around her vicious heart-strings.'—New York World.
